David Jones, Q.C. is a partner in the firm de Villars Jones. A significant part of Mr. Jones' practice involves acting as a neutral arbitrator, either as sole arbitrator or chairing boards of arbitration in both labour and commercial matters. In labour relations matters, he has written more than 400 awards over the past 20 years, arising from collective agreements throughout Western Canada in both the public and private sectors, federal and provincial. He is a named arbitrator under numerous collective agreements. David holds the designation of Chartered Arbitrator from the ADR Institute of Canada, is a member of the Canadian Foundation for Dispute Resolution's Third Party Neutral Panel, and a member of the British Columbia International Arbitration Centre's panel of arbitrators. An increasing part of his practice has been devoted to acting as a mediator in difficult labour relations and commercial matters (including pension issues).

David studied at McGill University in Montreal and was a Rhodes Scholar at the University of Oxford in England. For 16 years, he was a full-time law professor at McGill and at the University of Alberta. He was Associate Dean at both McGill and Alberta, and was Acting Dean twice at Alberta. He is co-author of Jones & de Villars' Principles of Administrative Law (Carswell; 5th ed., 2009). He is also the Conflict of Interest Commissioner for the Yukon Legislative Assembly.
